The better element of the party protested against the corrupt tacties when Cleveland was in the White House, but the alleged reformer refused to ald them

One interesting change most be noted in the relations of Mr. Cloveland and Governor Hill, says the Tribune. So long as the former was in office, a prefence of friendliness was kept up, but nownthis scems to be abandoned. The Cleveland newspapers are attacking Hill with great bitterness, and the Hill newspapers are respending with cordial animosity. At the famous banquot slience from Mr. Cleveland polite speech. The two factions are ateach other's throats.

The Oble Democrats are including in their usual talk about "redeeming" that State this fall. The only thing that distinguishes this year's beasts from those which we have been accusiomed to hear is to be found in the fact that Fire Aloris to be found in the fact that Fire Aloris Foraker is likely to be the candidate against Deniceratic hope, Foraker's candidature ought to.—Boston Herald. This is a case of attempting to be funny without regard to facts. Gov. Foreker has swept the field twice and will be equally successful if he heads the ticket again this year. In the last State election the Cleveland Administration threw its whole influence against Goy, Forsker, taking so pronounced a stand that the New York World declared that Foraker's election would mean Cleveland's humiliation. The bogus reformer only succeeded, however, in increasing Gov. Foraker's majority. The Mugwumps do not like Ohio's gullant Governor, but the people do.

The newspapers have had a fashion of poking fun at Philadelphia, as a dead and alive sort of a town, but when it comes to a question of aiding auffering humanity there is nothing slow about the city. Her public spirited citizens have rhised nearly $900,000 for the sufferers in the Consmangh Valley, and the binks have now come forward and volunteered to farnish the $1,000,000 required to clear away the debris, | not hes without interest and wait until the Legislature assembles to appropriate money to repay the loan. At first it was thought Gov. Reaver might draw the money-from the State Treasury after getting a lot of wealthy citizens to sign ant indemnity. bond to protect the State. There was no difficulty in gething three hundred or more responsible citizens to sign the bond, but doubts were raised about the constitutionality of taking money from the treasury without an appropriation and that course was abandoned. well enough for a lot of Mugwump chliors, but practical business men interested in American enterprise have no use for them.

The New York Wine and Spirit, Gazetta in an article denouncing Mr. Mason, the new Commissioner of Internal Revenue, says he is "blocking" and "hamperlog" the liquor business of the country at much cas possible. Well that is a charge that no saloon organ had an opportunity to make against any revenue official during Cleve hand's administration. On the contray the saloon interests were cared for tenderly by that administration, and no complaints were leard from within party lines.

The English newspapers are generally agreed that America has for the first time taken runk as a first class Power in diplomacy.—New York Evening Post.

The above would never have been wilten had the Cleveland alministration been in the case of the contray thing, but this disagreeable legacy of the Cleveland administration bas been promptly met by its successor and, saligatorily settled in a few weeks.

A VALUABLE INVENTION

Of a Railroad Signal By Mr Frank Robinson The Automatic Grayity Safety Signal, upon which the invontor, Mr. Frank Robinson, of this city, foremen of motive nower for the eastern division of the Maine Central, has been at work for some time, was finally put together yesterday, and worked in the Maine Central yard with most satisfactory results. A Willia reporter was shown the signal by Mr Robluson who explained it in Lenduskeng Block, and while the new designed for the protection of lives and rooms have not been fully completed they properly by keeping trains from running into each other by means of a signal which works automatically and which by means norter called at the bank vesterday and a tral ; passed the point at which the algnal la

The Ards House Mystery

By EDWARD HEIRE

"My dear, young lady," I said, laying my hand, upon the book, "what is this", I will, tell you. A few days after after that happened, I found it is one of my grandfather's private drawers, recognised it at once as what he called his diary, in which he was in the habi of jotting something almost every night.

I knew it well; for I often saw him writing in it, and he frequently referred to it ing in it; and he frequently referred to it when any question arose as to the date of particular domestic confirmes. I took it to my own room, promising myself a sad sort of pleasure in looking over some of his ample entries. It opened, when I unclasped it, at the last written page. It was dated at top July i, the very night before his—his death. It turned back a was dated at top [July], the very night before his—his death. I turned back a leaf to [June '90] and began to read. What I read shocked me very much, but it was not for a day or two that I began to loomest it with my grand-father's end. Gradually, however, the horrible idea of this connection, crept into my mind, and then began a struggle which has nearly term me to pieces. You wonder at my speaking thus to you, lanest a stranger let I have no lone lake to speak to, except Horaco, and I could not speak to, except Horaco, and I could not speak to, the matter to him. Twenty times I have had that book in my hand to destroy it, but always seemed withheld by an unseen power. As often have I resolved to give it up to you, but my limbs as well as my heart falled me. I beguitte have terrible dreams nightly. It was always my grand-father unging me to something, and always some one clse, whom you will find named there, struggling with him and draceting him navay. At learth I could named there, struggling with him and cruggling him away. At length I could bear it no longer. There it is, let the worst come of it. I cannot help it. Read it; perhaps," she added, wistfully, "you may think there is not much in it after all."

I opened the book, and this is what I

"June 30—I have received a great shock today." It is always painful to discover that you have be tower that you have been deceaved by these you have trusted and benefited. In any case it would have been a great griaf to me to find that Gerald Lowe was say casa it would have been a great grief to me to find that Geruld Lowe was a base fellow; as it is, the grief is perhaps, more, but it is tempered by the feeling of: a danger escaped. I was about to give him my dearest Florence. What a morey that he is found out before and not after! I never liked him from the heart. When at the bank this morning I found that my name had been forged to a check for 4200. I reputinted the transaction, but after hearing it was Geruld who presented it I drow back, pretended to recolled myself and admitted a mistake. But it was no mistake. The check was from my book and the signature was well imitated, but it was not mine. Horned and Geruld are the only persons who have access to my desk! I know it could only be Geruld.

"In the course of the afternoon I made up my mind what I had discovered. He made an attempt at denial, but I showed him very success, said it was to ray, a debt of honer and even him from disgrace, and that he had intended to pay it back (with Florence's money). I said that I would not only refrain from proceeding. Jim, but fallill my promise of starting him in business, if he would relinquish Florence and disappear at once from Aris Homeo for good and all. He flashy refused to de this. Florence loved him and he would not eight to him relinquish Florence and disappear at once from Aris Homeo for good and all. He flashy refused to de this. Florence loved him and he would not give her up. She would reliquish Florence and disappear at once from Aris Homeo for good and all. He flashy refused to de this. Florence loved him and he would not eight to him a sullen allence. This is a long entry; it is not often I have unything so disturbing to write about. I thing so disturbing to write about I am tired and must be off to bed.

"July I. Gerald is still stubborn. He seems to think that! in the affection of Florence he has a mainstay of safety. It pressing that point he showed himself in a worse light than ever. His past life must have been different from what I thought. I tried to show him that her love was founded on a cleusion; that when she saw him as he was my probabilition of the marriage would be unnecessary. I again put the alternative before him to give up Florence, or be publicly prosecuted for forgey. I am afraid Hoet my temper and spoke loudly; he did the same. At the end he asked another day and I (consented. Florence must be saved at all hazada. It is her wealth, and not herself, he is so much in love with. Hence has just been in to say 'good night.' I was strongly moved to tell him all, but refrained. The importance of this evidence in the handwriting of, the deceased (which could no doubt be sworn to) I saw at once, but to help the Miss Willoughby's feelings I made somewhat light of it. I have all you. I had already ovidence of the forgery was, in fact, in London today about it—so, whatever happens, you need not look on your-self as having materially contributed to the result."

"You are still interested in Mr. Lowe?"

"You are still interested in Mr. Lowe?"
"Not in the way I was." I will never imarry him now."

Have you told him nor Have you told him socion No; but he sees I am changed.

"Does he suspect the canse?"

In a few moments we had the carpet fatenings form up—and I thought they came away assonibilingly cary—the car-pet rolled beck, and the flooring bare. per rolled beer, and the mouring care.
In front of the hearth we found a small round hole, into which, when I put my hand and pulled, a trap door rose castly on hingen; It was such a contrivance as I had seen before for stowing away, con-veniently a small supply of coals. It learned afterwards that such, in fact, learned afterwards that such, in fact, and been the purpose of this construction, the rooms having been for many years occupied by an old and valued retainer of the family. On looking in I saw nothing but a heap of black dust, but Simpkins thrust his hand in, groped about, and pulled out a watch and chain.
